More Resworth on Torrents When the official download Take To LongMisterfuzz recommends using BitTorrent whenever possible to avoid traffic jams: There was just a download of the new Ubuntu release and it lagged a bit, probably due to a fairly heavy load on the servers. ETA was about 3 o'clock, so I decided to try my luck with the torrent. The entire image was taken in less than 10 minutes. The moral of the story: Bypass the lagging servers w / torrent downloads, if any. This may be obvious to some, but less obvious to others. Also, many times, you can search for a (legal) torrent and find ones that you didn't even know existed. Use paper clips to store notes, a reminder of the magnetic BezelDaniel iMac makes good use of the magnetic monitor of my iMac: Here's one I've been using for years, but it seems to shock everything that comes into my office (even longtime Mac users). As you probably know, the current (and last few generations) iMac have magnets that surround the screen. These suckers are strong, so they hold a few paper clips as well as business cards, even a letter the size of a sheet of office paper. My desk is still a cluttered mess, but it helps me to have paper clips and reminders in front of me rather than mixing with the crap underneath. Keep being able to fix download problems on some MacsMisterfuzz shares your solution for fastidious don't know if this has affected other users, but when I updated my MBP to 10.7.2 and restarted I got a weird DOS-like screen saying: No bootable device - Insert the boot drive and press any key. It's This. from my running drive somehow got switched to my (empty) Boot Camp section. The problem was solved by downloading while carrying option (aka Alt) to return to OS X and then change the drive launch back to Macintosh HD in system preference. Preferences.
